What is Radon?

Radon is #86 on the periodic chart of elements, a gas that occurs from the radioactive decay of radium. You can not see, smell or taste radon, yet it is by far the most dangerous indoor environmental pollutant found in many homes. Regardless of the age or style of your home, if radium is present in the soil that surrounds your house, your home may actually be unsafe to live in. Exposure to high levels of radon can be deadly.

According to the EPA, homes located in the Midwest are more likely to have radon problems than any other area of the United States.

What Are The Health Effects?

As you breathe, radon decays within the lungs releasing small bursts of energy particles (radiation) which can cause lung damage and cell mutation. Cancer is formed when mutated cells multiply. Radon is second only to smoking cigarettes as the leading cause of lung cancer deaths in America, killing more than 21,000 people every year. Those at the highest risk include children, (because their lungs are still developing), smokers (because of the multiplying effect), people that spend most of their time indoors and anyone exposed to high levels of radon.

How Does Radon Enter Your Home?

If radon is present in the soil that surrounds your home, it will be drawn into the basement by the negative pressure that is found in the lower levels of all structures. This vacuum effect pulls radon into the home and is then generally distributed throughout the house by the heating and cooling system. Radon does not stay in the basement.

How Do You Know If Your Family Is Safe?

The only way to know is to test. The U.S. Surgeon General is urging all Americans to get their homes tested as soon as possible. The EPA states "You should fix your home if it tests at 4.0 pico-curies per liter (pCi/L) or higher. If your home's test is between 2 to 4 pCi/L, you should seriously consider fixing it". The lower your family's exposure to radon, the safer your family is.

Radon Facts

A "pico-curie" is a unit of radiation named in honor of Madam Curie. Living in a home with 4 pCi/L for a full year is the same radiation exposure as 200 chest x-rays.

How Do You Protect Your Family From Radon?

The best method of protection is a technique called "Soil Gas Depressurization" which actually stops radon before it has a chance to enter your home. To accomplish this a piping system, typically 3" or 4" PVC, is installed that penetrates the concrete floor in the lowest level of the structure. The system is then routed up through the roof with an inline radon fan installed in the attic, or routed so that the pipe and fan are on the exterior of the home. Radon is drawn into the piping system from below the slab (not household air) and is exhausted safely outside following very specific guidelines (ASTM E2121-08) so that it may dissipate harmlessly into the atmosphere.

The basic types of radon removal systems are called Sub-Slab, Block Wall, Sub-Membrane or Drain Tile Depressurization. The type of system needed for your home depends on the way your home was built, soil types beneath the slab, radon concentrations in the soil, air pressures and airflow. The proper design and installation of a radon system requires specialized diagnostic equipment and expertise that are beyond the skills of the average homeowner or contractor. Be sure to hire a Certified Radon Specialist to ensure your family's safety.

Radon removal systems can also prevent other chemicals from entering your home and reduce basement or crawlspace dampness. Keeping basements drier helps prevent mold growth. This reduction in moisture, mold and other soils gas contaminants can greatly improve indoor air quality and provide significant health benefits for your family.

A system installed by Professional House Doctors, Inc.[®] is the best guarantee that you and your family will be kept safe for as long as you live in your home.
